

The Relationship between Biodiversity and Elevation: A Case Study

The distribution of known element occurrences (rare species and communities) and the percentage of those found on conservation land

Most protected land is located at high elevations, resulting in little protection for the rare species, natural communities and most wildlife which live in lower elevations.